What's up with community these days?

Good, bad, or indifferent, Rajneesh and other gurus popular in his day created community. For our time, how about SUE Speaks as a leaderless meeting place for high-minded individuals who want this to be a better world?

Have you ever had any personal experiences with Rajneesh to share?

Have you ever had any other guru you could tell us about?

What do you think about gurus?

With the collapse of Rajneesh ending the guru era, what else can bring a high-minded, self-aware community together? Can we do it here, at SUE Speaks?

I just was interviewed by Ideapod's CEO, Justin Brown, about the Emmy-nominated documentary series, Wild Wild Country. The series is about the wild wild rise and fall of Rajneesh, also known as Osho, the last guru from India who attracted a huge international following.

With Wild Wild Country making a huge splash on Netflix, I made a little YouTube video about my personal experience of being flown to Rajneeshpuram when I was being recruited to be a follower of Osho's. Justin Brown discovered my video and invited me to do a webinar with him, essentially to deal with what had been left out of the series.

The video above takes you to my blog post that has the webinar and more in it.
