Regenerative Leadership
Revolutionizes Organizations

New podcast episode!

...with Giles Hutchins

Giles Hutchins contacted me when he heard my podcast with David Lorimer and he is so clear and compelling about where we came from and where we need to go that he became my first guest I'd not known before.

Giles works with business leaders to open their perceptions to what's beyond their bottom lines. His book, Future Fit, half a century after the est era woke us up to responsible behavior, Giles builds on that work with his intuitive and creative mind to change the thinking of people who are a major influence on our world.

For our podcast, I asked Giles to speak to this prompt: "Something(s) I would do if I ruled the world..." Seeking ideas for what actually could be done is a major theme of mine now. How can we create a regenerative world? Giles and some previous guests have educated me as to how regenerative is even more primary than sustainable. That's where us humans are part of nature, coming from it rather than being separate from it and dominating over it, and I encourage you to listen to Giles as well as to Joel Solomon, John Fullerton, and David Lorimer to get your own education.

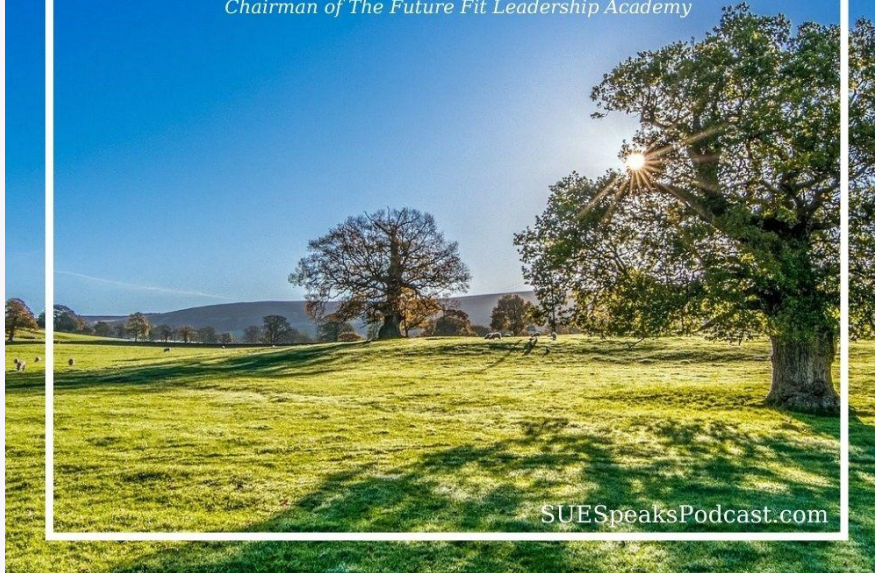

Giles has an unusual openness and warmth, and I hope that we can do what we talk about to bring thought-shapers to the table. With the urgency to get the world on a better track being in such a dramatic phase now, I'm encouraging people who think about what can be done to respond on my homepage to an invitation I've just posted there to talk to me. As I say in the intro to my podcast, "Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed, citizens can change the world. Indeed, it is the only thing that ever has." I'm collecting.
