Greetings!

OK, that headline is an exaggeration, BUT, have you ever tried to negotiate what it takes to do a podcast that looks to deliver something worth listening to? That the Coming Soon shingle on our homepage is now replaced with our new podcast actually is pretty miraculous to me. All the strategizing and designing and finagling and waiting and reminding and nagging, with a little begging thrown in so Leonard Cohen could deliver people to me, has been a long journey to NOW.

Episode 1 Searching for Unity in Everything: Meaningful Conversations with Meaningful People

What could get the world to change to where the good of the whole is as important to us as personal gain? It has been called way too broad, even mega-maniacal to think that in the bat of an eye we could change what's fundamental. But, you know, that's just an opinion. All that would have to happen, for example, is a visitation from an intelligent being not local to Earth. I'm not saying I have that guest, but just that doubters should open their minds to the miraculous. Just being alive is beyond comprehension. Where did all the species come from? Open minds are all that should exist. Throw out all other attributes and keep curiosity and we'd be OK.

In my podcast, I'm looking for wild ideas, survival tips for living in the present madness, and whatever else I can wring out of people who could help us become who we need to be in the world we need to create. Beyond issues, it's about mindset. Change minds and we change the world.

iTunes is the preferred listening post but if you don't have that you can listen on Google Play. Please listen and we'd love to hear comments.

My dream lover, Leonard Cohen, who supplied the theme song for my podcast, was on a monastic trip when I created my non-profit, Mighty Companions, and I asked him, in New Age language that's a little embarrassing today, if he'd join my pool of Wisdom Advisors. This was his response:

Thank you, my angel, wherever you've flown off to, for the gift of Suzanne!
