Founder and President of Capital Institute

JOHN FULLERTON

Episode 13
Creating a Regenerative Economy

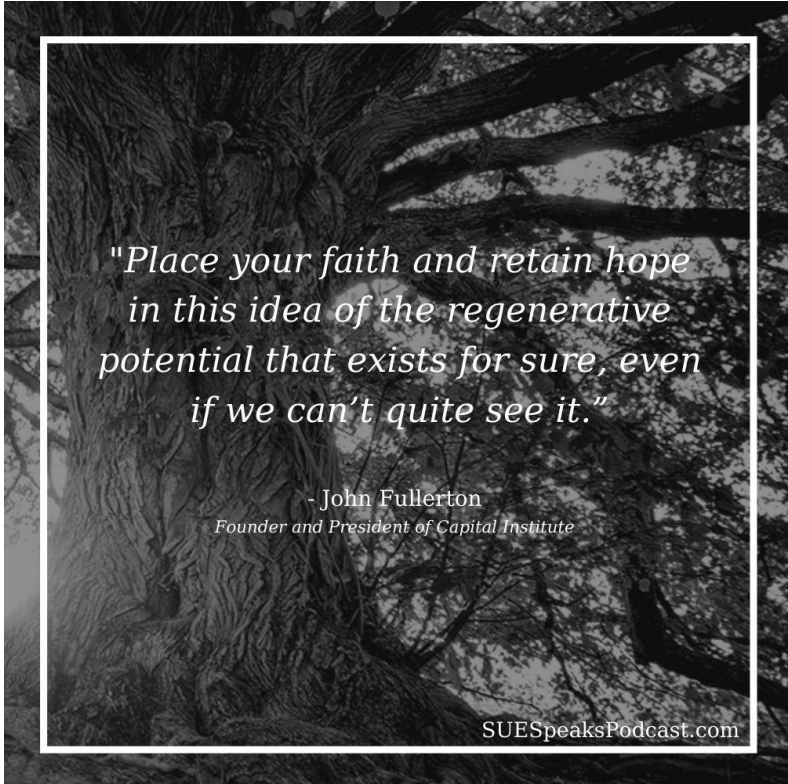

New podcast episode!

+ Invitation to a ZOOM CHAT with John Fullerton

All women would like a John Fullerton in our lives. An unabashed feminist, he's not only smart and imaginative and present and warm, but he's addressing fundamental things that need to change for us to have the world we want. All of his advocacy is pegged to the idea of living systems, where everything works together in robust circulation along the lines of how nature does it. After his first career as a managing director of J.P. Morgan, that steeped him in how things are done now, he founded Capital Institute to influence Wall Street to operate in a new way.

He is so clear that you will come away with the gift of understanding how we are handling the financial world and the regenerative economics we need to adopt. You'll get the broad theory and discover actual practices, including things that came as news to me, that need to be engaged in for "the reset" we must make. This hour could be life-changing, where you will come out of the fog most of us are in about money matters and become a big fan of John's and his game plan to radically transform the way we run the world.
